

To the READER.

Courteous Reader,

He flow progreffe of Children in their Learnings is an occasion of frequent complaints in Parents, and much griefe and discouragement in Masters, as I by reason of my calling, have had for some yeares experience. The Parents out of a blind prejudice, loath to suspect any defect in their Children, lay the fault upon the Masters negligence; and the Masters well knowing their owne paines and endeavours, impute it to the dulnesse of their Scholars, when may be they are least faulty: And the true ground of all is, that an over-hastic desire in the Parent of his Childs proceeding; and in the Master, of satisfying that desire, out-runs the capacity of the Child; and will needs have him over the stile (as we say) before her comes at it. Thus the Proverb proves true, Qui vinition program, strike absolute, The more haste, the worse speed; for festimaneanic exceptions estables, Haste makes waste; and they that begin their journey with Cuestic the Post, oft end it with Tom-long the Carriers. It is true, some Children are deplorate behaviours, & ex quovis lignarable to Mercurius; yet I conceive these evills might be quite removed in some, and much lessened in all, would the Parent but shew his discretion in not expecting too much from tender years; and the Master his, in framing his first principles so, as may best suit with the capacity of his Scholar.

Perveniri ad summum nist ex principiu non potesticis Quintilians maxime; and a facilioriban est incipiendum, is a rule of Method. I have therefore to the number of many other helps, made to facilitate the way of Learning to Children, adventured to adde these sew shich (as I hope) made use of according to my following directions.

The reason inducing me to this little worke, was, that I have often observed how Children have been pualed and counfounded, by being the least knowledge of their Mother Tongue, or were able at all therein to diffunguish the parts of Speech : so that I have had some, that would in constraing give me the right English of a Latine Noune, or Verb, yet could not then distinguish by the signification which was the Noune, and which was the Verb. And others that would in parsing rightly varie a Noune of the Comparative degree, and give me the true English of it, yet could not then tell mee, of what degree of Comparison it was. I might give more instances in this kind, but I suppose the experience of all those who teach young children, will make them needlesse.

Now construing and making latine, I conceive resembles the rearing of a building; parsing, and analysing, the taking of it down; and what successe can we expect in rearing of an house? What danger and spoile may we not justly seare in the taking of it down? I if such an one be put upon either employment, that is so surre from knowing the right use and place of every part, that he is not able to distinguish one materiall from another, nor knows a difference betwixt wood and

Hone.

My drift and scope therefore is, to have a childe so well verst in his Mothers tongue, before he meddle with Latine, that when he comes to the construing of a Latine Authour, he shall from the signification of his words in construing, be in some good measure able to tell distinctly what part of Speech every word is, though he be not able to parse, vatie, or give any other account of one word in his lesson; and when he is put to translation, or making of Latine, he shall know from his English, both what part of Speech every word is, and what Syntaxis, or ordering it should have in Latine, though in the meane time hee never steard of one Latine word: And this I conceive may be in an indifferent manner effected by the Rules of this book, and the Praxis of them, according to these following directions.

Let your child, after he can pretty well read his Primer, bee called to the reading of this book, which I have therefore made all in English that so the Childe may begin with it betimes: and though it cannot be conceived, he should at the first reading understand much of the mattersyet happily something may slip unawares into his judgement however, for the point of reading, he may as well be exercised in this, as another English book. And this benefit will further accrew from it, that being able to read the words, though he doe not understand the matter, he will be freed (when he comes to saying by heart) of one of those three three troubles which children are out to; where they first learning things to memory, out of their book, the right reading of their words, the understanding of the cleaning, and the remembring of both committee of both committees.

to the Reader IT

When your Child hath once thus gone through the book, and hath come to an indifferent readineffe in his reading, let him read it over yet once again, but then I would advie that former gard be had of the matter, & that after the reading of his leffon the Malter flould require forme account of the understanding of it, by asking him forme questions, as he in his discretion shall think to fall within the capacity of the Childe, such as either he himself will be able to answer, or at least to apprehend the right answer when it is told him: as, How many your els there be: which of his letters are called yowels. How many parts of Speech. How many numbers. How many cases; and the like.

If at the second times reading the Master shall conceive his Childs judgment and memory in some good measure ripe enough for getting by heart, let him to that work on Gods name: but then I would advise at the first going over without book, that such rules be exempted, as the Master conceives too high for the capacity of the child at present; though the necessity of method give them their due place in the book, that so there may be least softe of time. And now likewise the Master may increase the number, and order the nature of his Questions, as he shall see the apprehension of the childe able to beare.

After the first going over by heart, the Master may require more or fewer of the formerly exempted rules to be learnt the second time, referring the rest till afterwards, as he shall see cause, always baying a speciall care of understanding the matter, with an equal regard of the

When thus the child is come to a competent measure of judgment in understanding the rules, let him onely say a part in this book, and in stead of a lesson in some Authour, goe to the sirst Praxis of the rules, by taking a verse or two, as shall be thought fit, out of the book of Pfalmer or Prover bs, and distinguish every part of Speech according to the example here annexed.

When he is come to a reasonable persection in this (which he will doe in a short time, the former directions being observed) then let him proceed to his second Praxis, consisting not onely in the distinction of the severall parts of Speech, but in the Syntaxis and construction of them, and let him give a rule by heart, or at least be able to turn to it, for every thing he saith, according to the manner hereaster shown.

After some profitable progresse in this way, let him still be kept some

The Epiftle, &c.

Part of the day in the practice of it, for feare of losing what he hath gained: and so he may proceed to some short introduction to the Latine tongue, which to avoid prolixity and losse of time, should have none of those rules which this book may make needlesses, such an one as if this Preparatory be accepted. I shall be encouraged ere long to publish from thence let him with speciall care learn the variation, and other Accidents of Nounes and Verbs, and bee kept in a Vocabulary way, till such time as he be thought fit to make Latine, when he e may make use of those helps which I have annexed to this Introduction; they concern chiefly the Participles of our English tongue; and some, such as are more for connexion then signification; yet such, as I conceive the greatest difficulty of turning English into Latine doth oft confish in them.

And were I worthy to advise, I would not have any Child put to the reading of any Latine, except Vocabularies, nor learne any Latine Grammar, till by the help of these and some other Rules he be in some good measure able to make Latine. For this (under correction of better Judgement) I judge a more certain, easie, and speedy way to bring children to the understanding of their Latine tongue, then by spending two or three yeares, or more in Grammar, with little pleasure to the Master, and lesse delight or profit to the Scholar, who receives hereby little improvement in his understanding, and sometimes is as wise, when he hath gone through his Grammar, as when he first begun, by reason of the disproportion of that which is propounded to be learnt, (considering the way of learning) and his capacity.

And now I leave this Book, and these Directions very indifferently to the use or resulal of all those, whose employment it may bee, to teach children their first Rudiments: onely desiring this candor and ingenuity from all, that they would be pleased not to passe too harsh a censure upon him, whose worst fault in this point is a good inten-

Thus Thavebern long in felting dotyne the Phinle, that to lay morning the become fully inderstood, and two things more fully inderstood, and two things more fully free provided that the childs when her comes to his feverall Practicable located the pre-cribed Argument, till her can perfectly doe it. In the fecond place, that when her begins to make latine, her bin exercised in the axamples there given to the Rules into after the formular over, if it from good, her may be fet to many the Rules intemfelves into latine, that to by frequent me of the booke upon all occasions, her may both better understand by and upon the point, have it almost all by heart.

If any shall object, that this is a way to bring up Children in Barbarisnes and Solecisnes, and can onely teach them to make plaine bald Latine. To him I answer, That a Child must first learne to goe, before hee can bee taught to dance. And though happily by following these Rules hee may in making Latine fall upon some Anglicisnes, yet shall those bee such, as may well for a time bee tolerated, considering his yeares. Nor is it to bee expected, that a Child at his first beginning with Latine, should have so much judgement, as rightly to distinguish the Idiome and propriety of a language. It is a difficulty which many of riper yeares and judgement, without long time, frequent practice, and diligent oblevation cannot overcome.

Besides, I doe not know how in teaching Children in Schooles by Rules, this possibly can bee avoided; for there is a necessity of reducing Rules to the least number, to avoid all needlesse expence of time, and for seare of over-charging and confounding the memories of Children; and there is fuch a copionineffe and variety in the feverall phrases and formes of speaking in a Language, that no Rules can reach them all. Indeed, were a Child to bee taught the Latinetongue by discourse without Rules, Anglicismes might be more avoided, because the Child should bee taught none; but then hee would bee able to fay no more in Latine then hee hath beene taught; and therefore the his proficiency in it, there will be required more time fpent, and paines taken, then can with reason bee expected in publique Schooles. The inconvenience then objected, as I conceive, is, confideratio confiderandio, unavoydable, and not fo great, but both may bee connived at for a time, and in a short time removed: and I beleeve any man upon tryall, will find it an ealier taske to teach a Child by Rules to make a piece of plaine, bald, dunftable Latine. and after to instruct him for the propriety of his phrase, and elegancy of flyle, when the Childs judgement is somewhat riper, and a great part of his worke already done; then to teach him both the language and the propriety of irrogether.
